Characteristic features of the genre

Characteristic features of the genre From other types of essays distinguish specific features: the Acute relevance of the topic. The issues raised should be relevant here and now. Subjectivity of judgments. In the work, through the attitude to the problem and individualized assessments, the personality of the author should be clearly expressed. The movement in the narrative from the particular to the General. Often the role of the reference point is a quote, which can be submitted to the epigraph. From a single case, the author gradually moves to generalizing analytical or philosophical arguments about the problem posed at the beginning of the essay.

Due to the lack of writing standards, the composition can be reversed from global conclusions to confirmation of them in the final parables, proverb, wise quote of the classic, an indisputable fact. Small volume. There are no rigid boundaries, but essays usually take between two and ten pages of printed text. Concrete things. In the framework of the essay is considered only one of many themes or ideas may not be. Free composition. This kind of composition does not tolerate any formal framework. Often the presentation is illogical, subject to random associations, semantic links are thought out by the author himself. A penchant for paradoxes. One of the tasks of the essay genre is to surprise and amaze the reader. Often the starting point for reflection is a bright, poignant statement or polemical definition that sets the tone for further presentation.

Ease of narration. The text should not be confusing terminology and overly complex structures. The author should try to win the trust and sympathy of the reader, to attract with simple and capacious phrases and sentences. Dialogic. The conversation with the reader does not imply the design of the essay in the form of replicas, as is done in the play. To achieve the effect of a polemical conversation, rhetorical questions are often used that require a mental answer, which does not always coincide with the one proposed by the author. Semantic unity. Despite the compositional freedom, the key theses and arguments should be consistent and not contradict the judgments expressing the author's personal position.

How to write an essay

the Main condition for writing a good essay – fluency in the subject. After all, the author will have to Express his own point of view, reason, draw conclusions. To logically structure the work, the first thing you need to think about the essay plan. It usually consists of separate brief theses on a given topic, which, as they are disclosed, should be reasoned and supported by evidence. The only formal requirement for writing an essay is a title. Being devoted to creativity, we should not forget that the task of the author is to convince the audience of the legitimacy of the proposed point of view, so the argument should be as strong and clear.
